Name	What I did after Leaving Homefield Preparatory School	What I am doing now
Jonathan Isaby	I attended King's College School, Wimbledon, and then studied Modern Languages and Linguistics at the University of York. After graduating in 1999, I embarked upon a career in political journalism, working variously as a political analyst in the BBC's Westminster newsroom, for the Daily Telegraph and then as Co-Editor of ConservativeHome.com. I then joined the TaxPayers' Alliance as Political Director in 2011, and served as its Chief Executive between January 2014 and August 2016. In 2008 I co-wrote Boris v Ken: How Boris Johnson Won London, the definitive account of the 2008 London Mayoral election.	Since September 2016 I have been editor of BrexitCentral.com, chronicling and analysing the UK's departure from the European Union, and I also appear regularly on TV and radio as a political commentator and newspaper reviewer.
